

How To Get On Family Feud

Introduction: The Dream of Standing on the Famous Stage

For decades, Family Feud has been a staple of American television. The iconic theme song, the charismatic host (from the legendary Richard Dawson to the effervescent Steve Harvey), and the simple yet thrilling premise of two families competing to name the most popular responses to survey questions have captivated audiences. It's more than just a game show; it's a cultural touchstone. If you and your family have ever shouted answers at the TV, you've likely thought, "We could do that!" The burning question, then, is how to get on Family Feud. This guide will walk you through every step, from understanding the basic eligibility requirements to mastering the art of the fast-money round. Whether you are a superfan or a casual viewer, the path to getting on the show is clearer than you might think, and with the right preparation, your family could be the next one standing opposite Steve Harvey. Let's dive into the ultimate playbook for making your television debut a reality.

Understanding the Show's Format and What Producers Look For

Before you even think about filling out an application, you need to understand what the show's producers are searching for. Family Feud is not just a trivia game; it is an entertainment product. The producers want families that are charismatic, energetic, and naturally funny. They look for genuine personalities, emotional highs and lows, and families that can banter well with the host. A perfect score on the survey answers is less important than being a great television family. Understanding this core principle is the first step in mastering how to get on Family Feud. The show thrives on memorable moments—the overconfident guesser who gets it wrong, the supportive grandmother cheering from the podium, the sibling rivalry that spills onto the stage. Keep this in mind as you prepare.

The Core Eligibility Requirements

Let's start with the basics. To even be considered, your family must meet specific, non-negotiable Family Feud criteria:

- Five Family Members: You need exactly five members. No more, no less. They do not all have to be blood relatives, but they must be a "family unit" (e.g., in-laws, cousins, close family friends who are considered family). The show has strict definitions, so read the fine print.
- Age Requirements: All contestants must be at least 15 years old. If a member is 15 to 17, they will need a parent or legal guardian's signed consent.

- Residency and Citizenship: You must be a legal U.S. resident and live within the United States. International families are generally not eligible unless special rules apply.
- No Prior Game Show Appearances: You cannot have appeared on any other game show in the past 12 months. Specifically, you cannot have been on Family Feud ever before. This includes both the daytime and syndicated versions.
- Background Check: All contestants undergo a background check. Being honest on your application is crucial.

Meeting these requirements is the foundation. Without them, every other step is irrelevant. Once your family fits the bill, you can move forward with the application process.

The Application and Casting Process: Step by Step

Now that you know the basic rules, it's time to tackle the actual process of how to get on Family Feud. The journey typically involves several stages, from an online application to a live group audition.

Step 1: The Online Application

The first official step is usually to fill out a detailed online application on the official Family Feud website. This is a straightforward form, but you must give it careful attention. You will be asked for:

- Basic contact information for all five family members (name, address, phone number, email).
- A "family bio." This is your chance to sell yourselves. Describe your family dynamic. Are you competitive? Are you a multi-generational family? Do you have a unique story? Be specific and engaging. Avoid generic descriptions like "we get along well." Instead, try something like, "We are a loud Italian-American family from Chicago where Sunday dinners are full of arguments over who gets the last meatball. That competitive spirit is exactly what we'll bring to the Feud stage."
- A recent group photo. This is critical. Make sure it is high-quality, well-lit, and shows everyone smiling and looking cohesive. Avoid large group shots where faces are tiny or blurry. A clear, honest, and cheerful photo goes a long way.
- Answers to a few sample survey questions. You might be asked, "Name something people do when they are nervous," or "What is something you always forget to bring on vacation?" Answer honestly, but remember that the producers are looking for fun, relatable answers.

Step 2: The Open Casting Call (The Live Audition)

If your application catches the casting team's eye, you may be invited to a live casting call. This is the most nerve-wracking and important part of how to get on

How To Get On Family Feud

Family Feud. These events are often held in major cities across the U.S. and are open to the public. The casting call is not a trivia test; it is a personality test. You will likely be grouped with other families and asked to simulate a short game. The producers watch for energy, charisma, and how you interact with each other. They want to see genuine excitement, not forced acting. Tips for the live audition:

- Be Loud and Proud: Don't be shy. Project your voice and show enthusiasm. The stage is a big place, and the producers need to see that you can command it.
- Showcase Your Family's Unique Dynamic: If you have a loud aunt who is always right, let her shine. If you have a shy cousin who suddenly comes alive, that's a great story arc. Do not try to be something you're not.
- Prepare for "Whammy" Questions: You might be asked to answer a survey question spontaneously. Don't overthink it; just give your first honest answer. The producers want to see how fast your brain works under pressure.
- Dress the Part: Wear coordinating outfits but not uniforms. The show doesn't require matching shirts anymore, but dressing in a cohesive color palette or showing your family's personality through clothing (e.g., a sports team jersey for a family of fans) can help you stand out.

Step 3: The Producer's Interview (For Semi-Finalists)

If your family does well at the casting call, you may be invited to a smaller, more intimate producer interview. This is often done via video call or in person. Here, the conversation becomes more personal. They will dive deeper into your family story, your jobs, your hobbies, and your relationships. They are ensuring you are camera-friendly and that your family story is compelling enough for a national audience. Be yourself, be engaging, and be prepared to answer questions with the same energy you would have on stage. This is where you show them that you are not only a fun family to watch but also a reliable one that won't freeze under the lights.

Mastering the Audition: Tips, Tricks, and Strategy

Knowing how to get on Family Feud is not just about the steps; it's about performing during the audition. Here are some advanced strategies to dramatically increase your chances.

Know the "Family Feud" Survey Mentality

The questions on Family Feud are based on surveys of 100 people. The answers are overwhelmingly obvious. Think "something you put in a salad" – the top answer is almost always "lettuce" or "tomato." Do not try to be clever or creative during the game part. During the audition, however, a little creativity can be good, but for the actual show, always go with the most common, mundane answer first. The producers know this. Show them you understand the Family Feud mindset by answering quickly and confidently with the most typical response.

Practice, But Don't Over-Rehearse

Your family should practice answering survey questions together. Use a list of common Family Feud questions found online. Time each other to get used to the buzzer and the three-second time limit. More importantly, practice the "pass" and "steal" dynamics. But here is the key: don't rehearse your personality. The best Family Feud moments are spontaneous. Practice the mechanics of the game, but let your natural reactions happen organically. Over-rehearsed families look stiff and scripted, which is the opposite of what producers want.

Create a Strong Social Media Presence

While not strictly required, having a social media presence (especially on TikTok or Instagram) can help. Producers may look you up. Post a video of your family doing something fun together—cooking, arguing playfully, or even a mock Family Feud round in your living room. Use hashtags like #FamilyFeudCasting and #GetOnFamilyFeud. This shows you are internet-savvy and have existing fan potential. The show loves families that can bring their own audience.

Handle Rejection with Grace

The truth about how to get on Family Feud is that it often involves multiple attempts. Many successful contestants applied two or three times before being selected. Do not be discouraged. If you don't get the call, re-evaluate your audition strategy. Maybe you need to be louder, or maybe your family bio needs more personality. Apply again the next time casting opens. Persistence is a key trait that producers admire.

What Happens If You Are Selected? Pre-Show Preparation

Congratulations! If you make it past the final producer interview, you will be scheduled for a taping date. This is when your Family Feud dream becomes real. Preparation continues.

Legal and Paperwork

You will need to sign a lengthy contract. Read it carefully. It covers rules of conduct, confidentiality (you cannot reveal the outcome of any game before it airs), and liability. You will also need to provide proof of eligibility (IDs, background check consent). Ensure all paperwork is handled quickly and honestly.

Wardrobe and Travel

The show typically tapes in Atlanta, Georgia (as of recent seasons). You are responsible for your own travel and accommodation unless the show provides specific stipends (which is rare for initial contests). The show's wardrobe department will give you guidelines on what to wear. Bright colors are encouraged. Avoid busy patterns (small stripes or checks) that cause a "strobing" effect on camera. Also, absolutely no logos or slogans that could be seen as advertising.

Game Day Prep

On the day of taping, you will arrive early at the studio. There will be a brief rehearsal to explain the flow, the buzzer system, and where to stand. You will meet the warm-up comedian and, eventually, the host (likely Steve Harvey). Trust the process. Stay calm, supportive of each other, and focused. Remember that even if you lose, the experience of being on Family Feud is a once-in-a-lifetime memory.

Conclusion: Your Family Feud Journey Starts Now

The question of how to get on Family Feud is answered through a combination of preparation, authenticity, and a little bit of luck. It begins with understanding the show's format, meeting the basic eligibility requirements, and then putting your best family foot forward during the application and audition process. Remember that producers are looking for families that are not only smart but also entertaining, warm, and genuinely fun to watch. Practice the game, but never lose sight of who you are. Whether your family is loud and boisterous or quietly competitive, there is a place on the show for you. So gather your five favorite relatives, fill out that application, and start practicing your "Survey Says!" chant. The stage is waiting, and your family's moment to shine could be just one audition away. Good luck, and may the survey answers be ever in your favor!
