The Strange Arrival: Chapters 1 through 4

Chapter 1: The Mysterious Stranger Appears in Iping

The novel opens on a cold February day when a stranger arrives at the Coach and Horses inn in the small village of Iping. He is heavily bundled in clothing, with his face completely hidden by bandages, dark goggles, and a wide-brimmed hat. The innkeeper, Mrs. Hall, is immediately struck by how peculiar the man appears. When she offers to help him remove his coat and hat, he reacts sharply, insisting on keeping everything on. This chapter wise summary of The Invisible Man begins with the central mystery: who is this man, and why is he hiding every inch of his skin?

The stranger asks for a room with a private sitting room and plenty of fuel for a fire. He pays well, which satisfies Mrs. Hall despite her growing curiosity. However, his odd behavior continues. He refuses to socialize with the other guests and spends most of his time in his room surrounded by chemical apparatus and strange bottles. The villagers begin to whisper about him, and his refusal to show his face fuels their suspicion.

Chapter 2: Teddy Henfrey's Suspicion

Mr. Teddy Henfrey, a clock repairman, arrives at the inn and is asked by Mrs. Hall to fix the stranger's clock. When Henfrey enters the room, the stranger becomes agitated and tries to rush him out. During the brief encounter, Henfrey notices the bandaged face and the strange way the stranger speaks. He leaves feeling unsettled and tells Mrs. Hall that something is not right about the man. This chapter establishes the growing unease in Iping and sets the stage for the community's suspicion to turn into outright fear.

Chapter 3: The Thousand and One Bottles

This chapter provides the first deeper glimpse into the stranger's activities. His room is filled with an astonishing number of bottles, chemical apparatus, and books. He works obsessively, often late into the night. When a local man named Mr. Cuss, the village doctor, visits out of professional curiosity, the stranger reluctantly agrees to see him. During their conversation, Cuss notices that the stranger's sleeve appears empty—as if there is no arm inside it. When the stranger allows Cuss to briefly feel his arm, the doctor is horrified to discover that he can feel the bones and muscles of an invisible limb. This is the first direct evidence of the man's invisibility, and it terrifies Cuss.

Chapter 4: Disturbing Discoveries at the Inn

The stranger's behavior grows increasingly erratic. Furniture in his room is often found overturned. Strange noises emerge at night. Mrs. Hall becomes more suspicious when she notices that the stranger's bandages seem to shift and move on their own. When a sudden incident occurs—the stranger's chair tips over and his clothing collapses as if there is no body inside—Mrs. Hall demands answers. The stranger defuses the situation by claiming he has a "disfigured" face and needs privacy. However, the villagers are no longer satisfied with this explanation. The tension in Iping is reaching a breaking point.
