

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

Understanding Plato's Allegory of the Cave: The Full Text and Its Timeless Message

For over two millennia, Plato's Allegory of the Cave has captivated readers, philosophers, and seekers of truth. It remains one of the most powerful metaphors for human perception, ignorance, and the pursuit of knowledge. Many students and enthusiasts search for the Allegory of the Cave full text to read it in its original form, ~~hoping to grasp its~~ profound implications. This article provides the complete allegory as presented in Plato's Republic (Book VII), followed by a clear interpretation and discussion of its modern relevance. Whether you are encountering this text for the first time or revisiting it, this guide will help you see beyond the shadows.

What Is the Allegory of the Cave?

The Allegory of the Cave appears in Plato's dialogue The Republic.

where Socrates describes a group of prisoners who have been chained inside a dark cave their entire lives. They can only see shadows cast on the wall by a fire behind them. The prisoners mistake these shadows for reality because they have never known anything else. The allegory then follows one prisoner's journey out of the cave into the sunlight, symbolizing the philosopher's ascent from ignorance to true knowledge. This story is not merely an ancient fable; it is a cornerstone of Western philosophy, addressing questions about reality, education, and the social responsibility of those who have seen the truth.

The Full Text of ## the Cave

---

Below is the complete passage from Plato's Republic (514a-520a), translated by Benjamin Jowett. This is the Allegory of the Cave full text as often studied in philosophy courses. Read it carefully to appreciate the imagery and the dialogue between Socrates and Glaucon.

Socrates:

And now, I said, let me show in a figure how far our nature is enlightened or unenlightened :— Behold ! human beings living in a underground

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

den, which has a mouth open towards the light and reaching all along the den; here they have been from their childhood, and have their legs and necks chained so that they cannot move, and can only see before them, being prevented by the chains from turning round their heads. Above and behind them a fire is blazing at a distance, and between the fire and the prisoners there is a raised way; and you will see, if you look, a low wall built along the way, like the screen which marionette players have in front of them, over which they show the puppets.

Glaucon: I see.

Socrates:
And do you see, I said, men passing along the wall carrying all sorts of vessels, and statues and figures of animals made of wood and stone and various materials,

which appear
over the wall?
Some of them
are talking,
others silent.

Glaucón: You have shown me a strange image, and they are strange
prisoners.

Socrates:
Like
ourselves, I replied; and they see only their own shadows, or the shadows
of one another,
which the fire
throws on the opposite wall of the cave?

Glaucón:
True, he said;
how could they see anything but
the shadows
if they were never allowed to move their heads?

Socrates:
And of the objects which are being carried in like manner they would only see the shadows?

Glaucón:
Yes, he said.

Socrates:
And if they were able to converse with one another,
would they

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

not suppose that they were naming what was actually before them?

Glaucón:
Very true.

Socrates:
And suppose further that the prison had an echo which came from the other side, would they not be sure to fancy when one of the passers-by spoke that the voice which they heard came from the passing shadow?

Glaucón: No question, he replied.

Socrates: To
them, I said,
the truth
would be literally nothing but the shadows
of the images.

Glaucón:
That is certain.

Socrates:
And now look again, and see what will naturally follow if the prisoners are released and disabused of their error. At first, when any of them is liberated and compelled suddenly to stand up and turn his neck

round and walk and look towards the light, he will suffer sharp pains; the glare will distress him, and he will be unable to see the realities of which in his former state he had seen the shadows; and then conceive someone saying to him, that what he saw before was an illusion, but that now, when he is approaching nearer to being and his eye is turned towards more real existence, he has a clearer vision—what will be his reply? And you may further imagine that his instructor is pointing to the objects as they pass and requiring him to name them—will he not be perplexed? Will he not fancy that the shadows which he formerly saw are truer than the objects which are now shown to him?

Glaucon: Far truer.

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

Socrates:

And if he is compelled to look straight at the light, will he not have a pain in his eyes which will make him turn away to take refuge in the objects of vision which he can see, and which he will conceive to be in reality clearer than the things which are now being shown to him?

Glaucon:

True, he said.

Socrates:

And suppose once more,

~~that he is~~ reluctantly dragged up a steep and rugged ascent, and held fast until he is forced into the presence of the sun himself, is he not likely to be pained and irritated?

When he approaches the light his eyes will be dazzled, and he will not be able to see anything at all of what are now called realities.

Glaucon: Not all in a moment, he said.

Socrates: He will require to grow accustomed to the sight of the upper world. And first he will see the shadows best, next the reflections of men and other objects in the water, and then the objects themselves; then he will gaze upon the light of the moon and the stars and the spangled heaven; and he will see the sky and the stars by night better than the sun or the light of the sun by day?

Glaucou:
Certainly.

Socrates:
Last of all he will be able to see the sun, and not mere reflections of him in the water, but he will see him in his own proper place, and not in another; and he will contemplate him as he is.

Glaucou:
Certainly.

Socrates: He will then proceed to argue that this is he who gives the season and

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

the years, and is the guardian of all that is in the visible world, and in a certain way the cause of all things which he and his fellows have been accustomed to behold?

Glaucou:

Clearly, he said, he would first see the sun and then reason about him.

Socrates:

And when he remembered his old habitation, and the wisdom of the den and his fellows - prisoners, do you not suppose that he would felicitate himself on the change, and pity them?

Glaucou:

Certainly, he would.

Socrates:

And if they were in the habit of conferring honors among themselves on those who were quickest to observe the passing shadows and to remark which of them went before, and which followed after,

and which were together; and who were therefore best able to draw conclusions as to the future, do you think that he would care for such honors and glories, or would he envy the possessors of them? Would he not say with Homer, "Better to be the poor servant of a poor master," and to endure anything, rather than think as they do and live after their manner?

Glaucon:

Yes, he said, I think that he would rather suffer anything than entertain those false notions and live in that miserable manner.

Socrates:

Imagine once more, such a one coming suddenly out of the sun to be replaced in his old situation; would he not be certain to have his eyes full of darkness?

Glaucon: To be sure, he said.

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

Socrates:

And if there were a contest, and he had to compete in measuring the shadows with the prisoners who had never moved out of the den, while his sight was still weak, and before his eyes had become steady (and the time which would be needed to acquire this new habit of sight might be very considerable), would he not be ridiculous? Men would say of him that up he went and down he came without his eyes; and that it was better not even to think of ascending; and if anyone tried to loose another and lead him up to the light, let them only catch the offender, and they would put him to death.

Glaucou: No question, he said.

Socrates:

This entire allegory, I said, you may now append, dear Glaucou, to the previous argument; the prison-house is the world of sight, the light of the fire is the sun, and you will not misapprehend

me if you interpret the journey
upwards to be the ascent of the soul into the intellectual world according to my poor belief, which,
at your desire, I have expressed—w hether rightly or wrongly
God knows.
But, whether true or false,

my opinion is that in the world of knowledge the idea of good appears last of all, and is seen only
with an effort;
and, when seen, is also inferred to be the universal author of all things beautiful and right, parent
of light and of the lord of light in this
visible world,
and the immediate source of reason and truth in the intellectual;
and that this is the power upon which he who would

Allegory Of The Cave Full Text

act rationally either in public or private life must have his eye fixed.

Glaucon: I agree, he said, as far as I am able to understand you.

Socrates: Moreover, I said, you must not wonder that those who attain to this beatific vision are unwilling to descend to human affairs; for their souls are ever hastening into the upper world where they desire to dwell; which desire of theirs is very natural, if our allegory may be trusted.